Man, these guys can really play. They definitely know what they're doing with a doom chord in their riff digits. After their band MOOD (doom spelled backwards) was put to rest, they resurrected their doom to form Wall fo Sleep. Four albums as MOOD taught them plenty about how to brew the Sabbath stew. They absolutely nail the morose, depressed, crushed spirit doom sound, as you might expect out of five Sabbath devotees from Hungary. No offense, but if you want to live in a country where you can cultivate your sense of abject hopelessness and eminent doom, I can't think of a better place than Hungary. Gabor's voice is absolutely doom perfection, and guitarists Sandor and Andras proudly carry on the Wino and Iommi legacy with distinction. (Tangerine Magazine, Glenn Tillman)
